Damaged Road in Dwarka

Credibility: 0

INCIDENT DESCRIPTION

There is a patch on the main road of Dwarka which is perpetually damaged because water tankers use that crossing. Apart from the weight and frequency of the tankers which fill up at the DDA pumping station, water gets spilled continuously from the tankers. As a result, the road at this crossing is permanently damaged. It has been repaired many times, including replacing tar with concrete. But each time the road breaks up within a few months of the repair.
Given the shortage of water in Dwarka, the water tankers are an essential life line for residents in this sub-city. So it is imperative that roads be built to meet the local transportation demand. The problem is also quite acute on many of the service roads, where the load bearing capacity seems much lower than the main roads. Consequently the damage caused by water tankers are quite serious.

LOCATION

On Dwarka Main Road, at the intersection between Sector 5 and 7, just after the bridge at the end of Madhu Vihar.

Should everyone have a custom app? Or just different branding?

Problems with proliferation

- Governments can't easily manage these different apps and communication channels.

- People don't always have clear expectations set for whether government can respond or act.

- Many apps aren't actually connected to the official government CRMs.

- Most apps aren't compatible with one another and everyone has a different app.

Benefits of a web API

- Governments can better manage how apps connect and how they are used.

- Governments can provide automated responses and set more accurate expectations for addressing the issue.

- Many different apps and communication channels can simultaneously connect to the official CRM.

- With many apps and services working interoperably using the same API, people and government have more choice.

Digital Government

Building a 21st Century Platform to Better Serve the American People

Introduction

"I WANT US TO ASK OURSELVES EVERY DAY, HOW ARE WE USING TECHNOLOGY TO MAKE A REAL DIFFERENCE IN PEOPLE'S LIVES."

– President Barack Obama

The Speed of Digital Information

When a 5.9 earthquake hit near Richmond, Virginia on August 23rd, 2011, residents in New York City read about the quake on Twitter feeds 30 seconds before they experienced the quake themselves.

Mission drives agencies, and the need to deliver better services to customers at a lower cost—whether an agency is supporting the warfighter overseas, a teacher seeking classroom resources or a family figuring out how to pay for college—is pushing every level of government to look for new solutions.

Today's amazing mix of cloud computing, ever-smarter mobile devices, and collaboration tools is changing the consumer landscape[1] and bleeding into government as both an opportunity and a challenge. New expectations require the Federal Government to be ready to deliver and receive digital information[2] and services[3] anytime, anywhere and on any device. It must do so safely, securely, and with fewer resources. To build for the future, the Federal Government needs a Digital Strategy that embraces the opportunity to innovate more with less, and enables entrepreneurs to better leverage government data to improve the quality of services to the American people.

Early mobile adopters in government—like the early web adopters—are beginning to experiment in pursuit of innovation. Some have created products that leverage the unique capabilities of mobile devices. Others have launched programs and strategies and brought personal devices into the workplace. Absent

Data Catalog Interoperability Protocol

Editors: Rufus Pollock (Open Knowledge Foundation), James Gardner (3aims)

Note

This proposal reflects the contribution of many people over a substantial period. In particular, there are the participants at the first Data Catalog Interoperability Workshop in Edinburgh in May 2011 (organized under the auspices of the LOD2 project), as well as the members of the data-catalogs group and mailing list where this specification has been discussed on an ongoing basis.
